In 1972, the Massachusetts Department of Correction, in an attempt to provide alternatives to the traditional methods of correctional programming, began implementing a system of community-based correctional programs. These programs (i.e., the Furlough Program, the Work and Education Release Programs, the Special Impact Program and the Community Rehabilitation System Program), had all been made possible through the passage of the Correctional Reform Act (Chapter 777) by the Massachusetts Legislature in 1972.

The Community Rehabilitation System (CRS), began operations in August of 1972. CRS is a network of small, separately operated community-based correctional facilities that handle both "pre-release" (clients who are within 18 months of their parole) and post-release (individuals on parole) clients.

Three Pre-Release Centers, Boston State, Shirley and Norfolk (Norfolk began accepting residents in August of 1975) are under direct supervision and control of the Department of Corrections. Charlotte House and Roxbury Community Rehabilitation Center are sub-contracted by private agencies, those being: The Friends of Framingham, and Roxbury Multi-Service Center, respectfully. The Department of Correction has also sub-contracted with Mass. Halfway Houses, Inc., five other centers, Brooke House, Temporary Housing, Coolidge House, 699 House and Coolidge Deer Island/DOC. These centers fall under the category of Mass. Halfway Houses but are still considered and serve the same purpose as the Department of Corrections, Pre-Release Centers, Boston State, Shirley and Norfolk.

The chief objective of a center is to help ease the transition from the structured routine of prison life to the relative freedom and self responsibility required by the larger community. At these centers, prisoners can engage in work release or education release programs in the area to which they will eventually be returning. Data in this report is taken from December 31, 1974 to December 27, 1975 inclusive. Pre-Release clients reside at all facilities, where as post-release clients reside at only Roxbury Community Rehabilitation Center, Brooke House, Temporary Housing, Coolidge House and 699 House as of this printing.

CONCLUSION

The year 1975 marked the opening of three pre-release facilities. Norfolk Pre-Release (located in Norfolk, Mass.) opened in August, and in December held more pre-release clients (22) than did Charlotte House (8) and Roxbury Community Rehabilitation Center (12) combined. The other two facilities that opened were sub-contracted by Massachusetts Halfway Houses, Inc., those being 699 House, located at 699 Mass. Ave. Boston; (opened in July) and Coolidge House-Deer Island/DOC located at the Back Bay Annex (opened in November). 699 House contained 10 pre-release and five post-release clients on the last day of December... and Coolidge House - Deer Island/DOC is registered as having 6 pre-release clients on that same day, with no record as having accepted any post-release clients since its inception.

There is a definite trend in the increasing number of individuals achieving pre-release status. Comparing statistics for the years 1973, 1974 and 1975 the pre-release population increased from 100 to 131 to 212 for those respective years. Also comparing the pre-release population with the total institutional population for those same years, the percentage of pre-release clients has increased from 5% to 7% to 9%. These figures show that even though the total institutional population has increased from 2,031 to 2,057 to 2,278, more and more clients within 18 months of their parole are achieving pre-release status.

The statistics are summarized below:
